

Education

We know that many parents and carers have concerns about their child returning to school or college, especially when their needs mean they may be more vulnerable. We have a risk assessment process in place to consider how each student will remain in their educational setting or receive on-line learning and support from us at home.

All of our service specific COVID-19 risk assessments have been developed in consultation with our staff, the people we support and our teams including staff council representatives. Our assessments are dynamic and will be reviewed on a regular basis. We may need to change these in response to updated Public Health England guidance from time to time.

Our COVID-19 action plan also describes the impact to service delivery, staff and the people we support relating to the outbreak of Coronavirus, maintenance of services and aims to reduce the likelihood of contributing to the spread of the illness. This has been developed in addition to our Business Continuity plans and individual Service Action Plans which set out the arrangements for a range of current or unexpected circumstances.
