

SENDIASS
SEN Support
in Schools

Most children and young people with special, educational needs and disabilities (SEND) will have their needs met in a local mainstream school without the need for an Education, Health and Care Plan (EHCP)

The SEND Code of Practice says all schools must:

- use their best endeavours to make sure that a child with SEN gets the support they need – this means doing everything they can to meet children and young people’s SEN
- designate a teacher to be responsible for co-ordinating SEN provision – the SEN Co-ordinator or SENCO
- inform parents when they are making special educational provision for a child.

Schools should also tell parents and young people about the SEND Information, Advice and Support service (SENDIASS)

What is SEN support?

Special educational provision in schools is called SEN support.

Schools should assess a pupils attainment and seek to identify pupils making less than expected progress.

The purpose of SEN support is to help children achieve the outcomes or learning objectives set for them by the school. Schools should involve parents in this process.

SEN support can take many forms, including:

- an individual learning programme for your child
- extra help from a teacher or a learning support assistant
- using additional materials and equipment
- small group work
- providing additional support to help your child to take part in the class activities and unstructured times of the school day
- helping your child with physical or personal care, such as eating, moving around school safely, toileting or dressing.

Schools may also involve specialists to advise them on effective support and interventions.

Who decides what SEN support my child has?

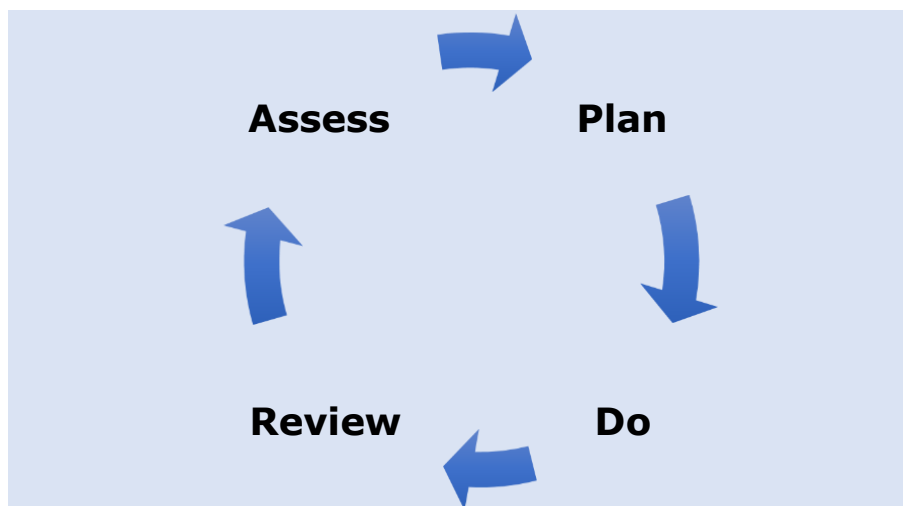

Teachers, supported by the SENCO, should make regular assessments of progress for all pupils. These assessments should identify pupils who are making less than expected progress.

The school should then decide if your child needs SEN support and teachers should talk to you and your child about this.

Sometimes you may be the first to be aware that your child has some special educational needs. If you think your child may need SEN support, you should talk to your child's teacher or to the SENCO.

A graduated approach

When your child is identified as having SEN, the school should use a graduated approach based on four steps. These are:

Assess

Teaching staff should work with the SENCO to assess your child's needs, so that they give the right support. They should involve you in this and, wherever possible, seek your child's views. The SEND Code of Practice says that 'schools should take seriously any concerns raised by a parent'. Sometimes schools will seek advice from a specialist teacher or a health professional. They should talk to you about this first.

Plan

If the school decides that your child needs SEN support, they must tell you. The school should talk with you about the outcomes that will be set, what help will be provided and agree a date for progress to be reviewed.

Do

Your child's class or subject teacher is usually responsible for the work that is done with your child and should work closely with any teaching assistants or specialist staff involved. The school should tell you who is responsible for the support your child receives.

All those who work with your child should be made aware of:

- their needs
- the agreed outcomes
- the support being provided
- the teaching strategies that are required.

Review

The school should review your child's progress, and the difference that the help your child has been given has made, on the date agreed in the plan. You and your child should be involved in the review and in planning the next step. Individual progress should be recognised, and the plan should be updated and amended.

The SEND Code of Practice says that 'schools should meet with parents at least three times a year'. Sometimes it helps to involve other professionals in further assessment or to support planning the next steps. If your child has not made reasonable progress, it will be important to agree with the school what should happen next.

SEN Information Report

Every school must publish an SEN Information Report about the SEN provision the school makes. You can find this on the school's website. You can also ask your child's teacher or the school's SENCO for information on the SEND provision made by the school. It is also valuable to familiarise yourself with the schools policies that will be available on their website.
